Malignant Catarrhal Fever (MCF) is a disease caused by a Herpesvirus that is naturally carried by sheep. Natural carriers, or reservoir hosts, are clinically unaffected by the virus, but can be a source of infection to susceptible animals, such as cattle. Clinical signs in cattle are variable, but may include: high fever, diarrhea, ocular and nasal discharge, seizures, and sudden death. Cattle are at greatest risk for developing MCF when they are at shows or fairs that put them in close proximity to sheep, young lambs in particular. To reduce the risk of MCF in cattle, keep them separated from sheep and lambs. This disease is not passed between cattle and does not affect humans. For more information go to: <http://vetextension.wsu.edu/documents/MCFnov2008.pdf>

Sheep and Goats

All sheep and goats, including wethers, must be identified with official identification approved for use in the Scrapie eradication program. For information on Scrapies go to <http://www.bah.state.mn.us/bah/rules/exhibition-rules.html>. Scrapie tests are not required by the Board. Check with the exhibition to see if other tests are required.

Sheep and goats that are within 30 days of giving birth (before or after) cannot be exhibited unless prior arrangements are made with the exhibition and permission is granted by the Board of Animal Health.

For goats originating from Minnesota's MA zone, please see cattle requirements.

For goats originating from Minnesota's MAA zone and being
